

Dancing technique puts real people on dance floor

South Walton resident Chuck Reed, creator of "How to dance with two left feet: A comprehensive guide to dancing in the real world," offers instruction for real people that want to learn to dance.

"It's not Dancing with the Stars," Reed said. "The average person is not going to spend 80 hours training to do a choreographed dance. The video provides real life lessons for real people. It takes the awkwardness out of learning."

Rather than dancing only with one partner, like in the TV show, people learn techniques that can be used to dance with anyone, for any style of music.

Port Star, the method that Reed uses, puts the fun back in dancing and shows you how to relate to your partner.

"How to dance with two left feet" also provides practical information on dance floor etiquette.

The three-disc video sets are available at retail outlets and online at www.realworldddancing.com.
